

READ AND PUBLISH

ACS PUBLICATIONS

A Transformative Path

ACS read and publish agreements are a mutual investment in transforming the publishing world from subscription into open access. In exchange for a commitment to open access publishing, ACS will unlock subscription funds to also provide open access publishing credits.

Advancing Open Access.

What is an ACS read and publish agreement?

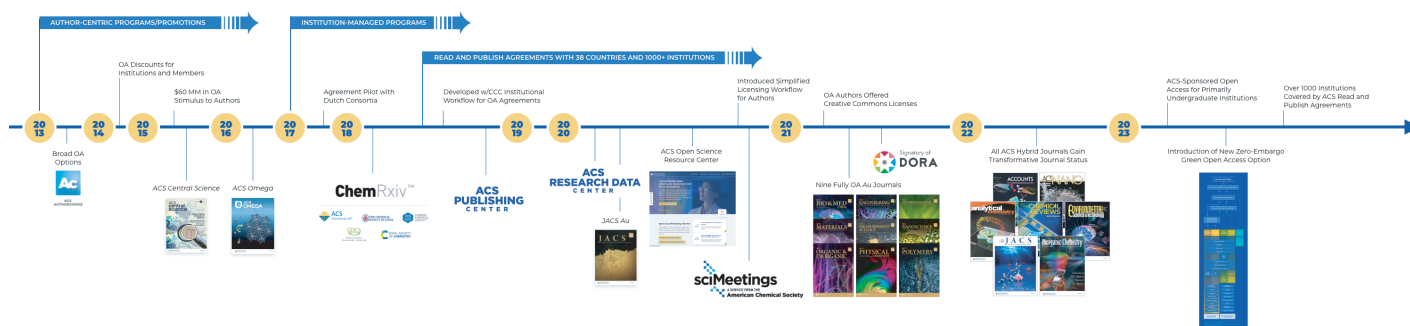

An ACS read and publish agreement is an arrangement between ACS and a research institution, consortium, or funder that combines reading access and open access publishing.

This means authors receive financial support from their institution for open access publishing and institutions maintain reading access to research article content included in organizational subscriptions. Authors also benefit from automatic submission to PubMed Central, and retain the right to deposit the final version of their article in a funder or institutional repository immediately upon publication.

How does ACS fit into the greater open access environment?

ACS has allowed open access to evolve organically while enabling both authors and institutions alike to participate. We're committed to sustainable economic models that help us maintain our mission to be the most valuable source of information to the scientific community.

ACS Commitment to Open Science

How has ACS invested in open access?

ACS has been hard at work preparing the technological foundation needed to facilitate the open access (OA) movement. We've made significant investments in the systems and infrastructure to support the OA publishing transformation and will continue to invest in further development as the tools, systems, technologies, and processes evolve. Our publishing workflow automatically matches authors with their institution's agreement, and our easy-to-use interface allows institutions to administer their open access publishing in moments.

Who are read and publish agreements for?

Read and publish agreements with ACS are designed to help researchers and institutions meet their open access goals. If your users read ACS Publications and publish in ACS journals, even occasionally, an agreement could benefit your institution.

Not ready for a full read and publish arrangement?

ACS also offers packages that allow organizations to purchase OA publication credits at attractive rates. This also makes it convenient for departments to make their own content open access without an institution-wide commitment, which can aid in the transition to a larger read and publish agreement.
